

The Princes Maria, 1st Rate Warship of the Amsterdam Admiralty, on the IJ off Durgerdam, flying the standard of Prince William of Orange

A painting by Ludolf Bakhuizen

ROB KATTENBURG

AMSTERDAM 1987

Louise Dahlman, self portrait, ca 1769.
Drawing in pencil and brown wash. Amsterdam Historical Museum

LUDOLF BAKHUIZEN, MARINE PAINTER PAR EXCELLENCE

The critical appreciation of the work of the seventeenth-century painter Ludolf Bakhuizen has undergone some considerable ups and downs. In his own day, and up to the second half of the nineteenth century, Bakhuizen was considered to be the best marine painter in Holland next to Willem van de Velde the Younger, and his paintings were in great demand. Around the 1850s his fame began to wane, and finally he even came to be despised for his dramatic rendering of shipwrecks and storms, the very subjects he had been most renowned for in his day. In the last ten or twenty years the tide has again turned in Bakhuizen's favour and his work is once more getting the attention it deserves.

Very little is known about Bakhuizen's early years. Born in the German town of Lüden in 1631, he moved to Amsterdam with his family in 1652. There he started his career as an apprentice to the famous merchant firm of Bontekoe & Hendrik, and its calligraphy and designs of rich chandeliers, an art form in which he was particularly proficient. It was only very long before he left the firm to work as a marines painter solely on art, in particular the drawing of ships.

As a draughtsman, and later as a painter, Bakhuizen seems to have been largely self-taught. The grisailles (or pen drawings as they are usually called in Dutch) he made in the 1650s show the influence of Willem van de Velde the Elder, but we do not know for certain if Bakhuizen was ever his pupil.

Impressed with his talent a number of artists pressed him to take up painting in oils. Bakhuizen apparently made a habit of visiting painters' studios regularly, where he learned by looking carefully and asking questions. Most of the time this was spent in the studios of Albert van Beurden and Hendrick Dubbels, though he stayed with neither long enough to suggest that he was a regular pupil of either. Although Bakhuizen's earliest painting is dated 1656, it was not until February 1663 that he was admitted to the painters' guild of St Luke.

His reputation as a marine painter must have grown rapidly, for in 1665 the Burgomasters of Amsterdam commissioned him to paint a large view of the Harbour of Amsterdam as a gift for Philippe de Lionne, minister of Louis XIV of France. By the standards of the day Bakhuizen was very well paid, receiving 1275 florins and a gold dagger for his wife. The fact that he was awarded this important commission argues that he was rated as highly as Willem van de Velde the Younger, who was still working in Amsterdam at the time. The painting is now in the Louvre in Paris.

According to Arnold Houbraken, Bakhuizen's biographer of the early eighteenth century, his fame as an artist was widespread, and among his international clientele he numbered the Grand Duke of Tuscany, the King of Prussia, the Elector of Saxony and several other German princes. Czar Peter the Great of Russia also seems to have been a great admirer of his work. Bakhuizen's career as a painter flourished without interruption until his death in 1708. Right from the beginning his paintings sold well, and after the Van de Veldes moved to London in 1673 he became the foremost marine painter in Holland.

He was a prolific master and it is not without awe that Houbraken tells us: 'They were unable to see all the works of art by his hand in one room, one would be astonished at his work. Some six hundred paintings have come down to us.' This figure needs to be revised however, as it is based on the now out-dated catalog of 1918 by Hofstede de Groot. Bakhuizen usually painted on canvas. A lot of his work is of a notably large format and sizes of 100 x 150 cm and larger are more a rule than an exception. He is singularly inconsistent in spelling his name; sometimes writing C.H., and sometimes a Y instead of an I. There seems to be a connection between the different signatures and certain periods in his career. For instance, from the 1680s onwards he spells his name with a K only. His subjects vary from sea and river scenes to showpieces based on historical fact or fantasy, often with a suffrage of colourfully dressed people on board the ships or in the foreground, and the storms and shipwrecks for which he was renowned. He painted very few sea battles. Apart from marines he made a number of portraits and the occasional allegory and town scenes. Besides oils he left drawings and engravings.

Affirming from a historical viewpoint Bakhuizen is less accurate than the Van de Veldes, there is nothing wrong with the way he depicts ships. It is clear from his paintings that he understood the different types of ship very well, and they lie convincingly in the water. Sailing and zigging are rendered faultlessly. One only has to look at the work of lesser marine painters to realise just how difficult it is to depict this subject realistically and convincingly.

Bakhuizen's artistry however, was not confined to technical mastery. Artistically he was on a level with the best, and his greatest works – of which there are quite a few – harmoniously combine an atmospheric quality, a wonderfully luminous colour scheme and a happy composition, and are on a par with the best paintings of Van de Velde the Younger.

1685 LB LB
LBK

Bakhuizen
1685

As is the case with almost every successful painter, the great demand for his paintings inevitably led to the occasional loss of quality, and routine tended to creep in. From the 1690s onwards, especially, Bakhuyzen produced a number of less inspired though very competent paintings. However, many works remain to fully justify his reputation as one of the best marine painters Holland has ever known, as can be seen from a tour of some of the great museums of the world, such as the Rijksmuseum and the Maritime Museum in Amsterdam, the National Maritime Museum in Greenwich, the National Gallery in London and the Louvre in Paris.

As an artist of superior standing, Bakhuyzen had considerable influence on his contemporaries and later generations. Some of the Van de Velde's of the 1670s have been said to owe him much. Although it is not known to have been his pupil, Abraham Storck was also influenced by Bakhuyzen. There are certain similarities in their work which are too marked to be the result of coincidence. Later generations of marine painters, such as J.C. Schotel, still turned to Bakhuyzen for inspiration.

It is to be regretted that a definitive biography and catalogue of Bakhuyzen's paintings has yet to appear. The Bakhuyzen exhibition held in the Maritime Museum in Amsterdam and in the Landesmuseum in Flushing in 1985, together with the accompanying catalogue, was it, not a step in the right direction, but it still remains to be done.

Lambert Bakkekoek,
*The French Fleet
in the IJ off
Hoorn*,
c. 1780-1802.
Oil on canvas,
105 x 115 cm.
Signed L. BAK E.

THE PAINTING

On the right we see the Princes Maria, flying the standard of William III of Orange, with the inscription 'PRO RELIGIONE ET LIBERTATE'. The ship lies with the wind abeam, to enable it to embark or disembark passengers or supplies.

The Princes Maria, also called the Princes van Oranje or just plain Princes, was a 92 gun first rate ship of the line belonging to the Admiralty of Amsterdam, and could carry a crew of 500. She was one of the largest ships the Dutch ever built, and one of 36 warships to be built in the 1680s by order of William III in order to withstand a maritime attack by the French. Simon Janse Lis of Amsterdam started building the Princes Maria in 1683.

In 1688 William III embarked for England at the invitation of the English to dethrone his father-in-law, the Roman Catholic King James II, and to reinstate the Protestant religion in that country. James fled and eventually sought refuge with his ally, King Louis XIV of France. In 1689 William III and his wife Mary Stuart were crowned King and Queen of England. War with France could not now be averted. Seconded by a delegation of the Dutch States General and the five Admiralties of the United Provinces, William insisted that a combined Anglo-Dutch fleet should strike before the French had time to bring their fleet to readiness.

In 1690 the combined fleet put to sea. In April of that year the Princes Maria was the first ship to be lifted over the mudbank of Pampus near Amsterdam by means of a 'tunnel'. This experiment was a success, and from then on ship canals were widely used.

Flying the flag of Rear-Admiral Gillis Scney, the Princes Maria first saw action at the Battle of Bevezier (Beachy Head) in July 1690, in the course of which this 'most gallant' of Dutch warships, as a contemporary source put it, was heavily damaged. The Dutch fought the French bravely, but at the crucial moment were let down by their English allies. The English, who later apologized for their behaviour to the States General in The Hague, took it on themselves to pay for the necessary repairs and for the building of twelve new ships.

Portrait of Vice-Admiral Gillis Schuyt, 1691, J. Weenix
The Prinses Maria can be seen in the background.
Nederlands Historisch Scheepvaartmuseum, Den Helder.

Early in 1691 the Prinses Maria formed part of the squadron of Lieutenant-Admiral-General Cornelis Tromp. Tromp, famous naval hero of Michiel de Ruyter in earlier days, died within a few weeks of his elevation to this rank, and was succeeded by Philip van Almonde.

In 1692 the Prinses Maria took part in the Battle of L' Hugue against the French. This time the combined fleet emerged victorious. Once more the Prinses Maria was the flagship of Gillis Schuyt, who had been promoted Vice Admiral for his brave conduct during the Battle of Beachy Head.

The Prinses Maria achieved her greatest fame in the early years of the war with France, but she did not have a very long life. She was last mentioned as being in active service in 1696, and was sent to the breaker's yard in 1728.

On the richly decorated stern of the Prinses Maria can be seen the arms of the seven United Provinces of the Netherlands; with those of Holland at the top of the taffrail and the other six below the windows of the stateroom. Below them is the name Prinses Maria, flanked by the arms of the City of Amsterdam and an oval shield with what appears to be two crossed swords and the initials W and M, no doubt standing for William and Mary. Behind the stateroom windows a company of elegantly dressed ladies and gentlemen raise their glasses in a toast.

The large red, white and blue flag and pennant at the main suggest that the commander of the fleet is on board. A salute is being fired, possibly in honour of a VIP who has left the ship to be conveyed to town in the rowing yacht seen in the middle foreground, which is flying two flags with the arms of Amsterdam.

Next to the Prinses Maria is a large transom yacht with standing gaff rig and leeboards, lying head to wind and firing a salute. Yachts were often official vessels belonging to the States General, the Provincial States, the Admiralties or the East and West India Companies. They came in several varieties, the largest and most luxurious being very comfortable with a transom stern, a stateroom aft, another room abaftships and a galley and pantry in the forecastle. As they were fast ships, they gradually came to be used by the rich for pleasure.

In the foreground on the extreme right a bawer with standing gaff rig is running before the wind. Bawerts were used to carry cargo, but could also be pleasure crafts with a stateroom, as the one on this painting appears to be. Bawerts came in different shapes, depending on where they were built and how they were used.

In the left foreground a Frisian kaag is running free. Features in almost every painting by Biezenoer, the kaag was one of the most common inland vessels for carrying people and goods, and was often used for transferring cargo from sailing ships. It had a broad rudder operated by a tiller, and a deck house. Sometimes there was a gallery below deck. The little boat close behind is delvering sails.

A little further to the left is a spritsail-rigged water-schooner, flying the flag of the town of Zwolle. The water-schooner was a common and well-known sight on the Zuyder Zee in those days, where it was used for fishing and for towing larger ships over mudbanks such as the Pampus.

In the background from left to right are a riggare, partly hidden by the waterside, a yacht, and to the right of the kaag another water-schooner and a fluit, the fore-and-aft sailing vessel of the seventeenth century, with its characteristic shape of a very wide 'bil' with sides narrowing sharply at the stern. On the bank to the left is the village of Dungenham, while between the yacht and the Prinses Marije is the characteristic square tower of the church of Raegelhorst.

Nicolaas Wijnen's measurement route showing the navigable channels to the North Sea from Amsterdam via the Pampus and the Zuyder Zee.

Notwithstanding the many different titles that have been given to this painting in the last two centuries, suggesting that it depicts a actual historical event, there is no conclusive evidence to support this. On the contrary, the common factor in all the descriptions given in the eighteenth and nineteenth-century auction catalogues is that something can be said against each of them.

The assumption that this painting may rather have had a symbolic meaning seems to be justified by the fact that the Prinses Maria, the pride of the Amsterdam Admiralty, took part in actions that were of major historical importance, and that she moreover flew the flag of an officer who became one of Holland's most heroes, albeit not as famous as Tromp or De Ruyter.

Adriaan de Lelie
The art gallery of
Jan Goldenerhaar
Saal, in his house
on the Herengracht
in Amsterdam,
1792-1793. Rijksmá-
seum, Amsterdam.
At top left is Jacobson's
painting.

AN ILLUSTRIOUS PROVENANCE

In 1771 the painting of the Prinses Maria et Duagerdara by Ludolf Bakhuizen was bought at an Amsterdam auction by Jan Gildemeester Jansz, the Portuguese agent and Consul General of the Netherlands, like his father before him.

Born at Lisbon in 1744, Gildemeester, whose family had made a fortune as merchants, came to Amsterdam with his parents in the 1750s.

Jan Gildemeester, who remained a bachelor all his life, started collecting paintings at an early age, and managed to acquire some 300 works of the highest quality, mainly by seventeenth and eighteenth-century Dutch artists. His collection included paintings by Rembrandt, Hals, Vermeer, Steen, the Ostades, Teniers, Wouwerman, Terborch, Adriaan and Willem van de Velde, Dou, Mitsu, Potter, Van Huysum and Rubens. Gildemeester bought a number of these himself at auctions, but also acquired many paintings through his friend, the famous Amsterdam art dealer Pieter Touquet. He also collected drawings and prints.

Gildemeester, himself an amateur painter and draughtsman, was a kind and hospitable man who liked nothing more than to show his collection to visitors. Though his main gallery was situated on the first floor of his magnificent residence on the Herengracht, his paintings hang all over the house, even in the servants' quarters. He also had some sixty paintings in his summer retreat 'Fransendal' near Amsterdam. Gildemeester was much admired for his taste, and his collection became widely known in Europe. After his death in 1799 his paintings were put up for auction, in accordance with his will.

A considerable number of his paintings are now in famous collections, such as the Wallace Collection and Buckingham Palace in London, and the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam.

In 1794 Gildemeester commissioned Adriaan de Lelie to do a painting of himself showing a company around his gallery in his house on the Herengracht in Amsterdam. At top left is Bakhuizen's painting of the Prinses Maria.

LUDOLF BAKHUIZEN

(Enkhuizen 1651 – Amsterdam 1728)

The 'Pampus Mary' on the IJ off Duyperden, flying the standard of Prince William of Orange

Oil on canvas, 108.5 x 159 cm

Signed L BAK 1

Provenance.

Sale Pieter Vermeulen de Knathuys, Amsterdam, 19 June 1763, lot no. 4 (Dfl. 400 to Nieuwenhuizen)

Anonymus sale, Amsterdam, 25 July 1771, lot no. 17 (Dfl. 400 to Gildemeester)

Sale Jan Gildemeester Janzen, Amsterdam, 11 June 1822, lot no. 2 (Dfl. 200 to Westerwout)

Sale Simon Cesar and George Hibbert, Christie's, London, 15 May 1822, lot no. 60 (255 guineas to the Earl of Breadalbane)

John Campbell, 4th Earl (1st Marquess from 1831) of Breadalbane (1762-1834), Taymouth Castle, Perthshire

His son, John Campbell, 5th Earl and 2nd Marquess of Breadalbane (1796-1862), Taymouth Castle, Perthshire

His sister, Lady Elizabeth Pingle (d. 1828), Langton House, Berwickshire

Her daughter, the Hon. Mrs R. Bain Hamilton (d. 1912), Langton House, Berwickshire

Her sister, Magdalene, Lady Harvey (d. 1913), Langton House, Berwickshire

Her grandson, Col. the Hon. T.G.H. Mungen-Cuterville (d. 1965), Langton House, Berwickshire

His daughter, Lady Ivonne

LITERATUUR

- J. van Beijlen. Scheepsyun de Nederlanden. Amsterdam 1972.
- F.J. Bel. Die Holländische Marinestaffel aus 17. Jahrhundert. Braunschweig 1971, pp. 121-307.
- Bos Brus, Adelbert Vosmaer, Willem L. van de Watering. Leidse/ Haarlemse 1601-1750 Schouwburg. Middelburg 1976.
- Mr. C.J. van Bruyn Kops. De Amsterdamsche schouwburgen (ca. 1600-1700). Bulletin van het Rijksmuseum 13 (1965) nos. 3, pp. 79-124.
- J.M. de Groot, Robert Voigtman. Satiric plays written by Dutch Masters from the Seventeenth Century. New York 1960.
- C. Houtman de Groot. Boekdrukmasters en bronnen voor een geschiedenis der Werken der boekverzamelaars en bibliofuten (1600-1700). Eindhoven/Breda/Pans 1937-1974, 16 vols., vol. 7 (1972).
- Arnold Heintzken. De Grote Schouwburg der Nederlandse Kleinkunstenaars. Amsterdam 1713-1721, 3 vols., Vol. 2, pp. 236-241.
- J.C. de Jonze. Geschiedenis van het Nederlandsche theater. Den Haag 1754-1865, 4 vols.
- W. Mees. De Hollandse schouwburgen in de zeventiende eeuw. Amsterdam 1986, Vol. 2, pp. 362-371.
- Pauwel Blaeu van den Coornhof's Leidse schouwburg te Leiden. Aan de Zuilenstraat en Langstraat op de hoek van de Zuilenstraat en de Langstraat te Leiden op 12 juli 1692 gebouwd. Volgens de bladzijde van de Uitg. Adriaenij Pauwel Engelse 1692.
- R.W. Mees. Een Grootsteur van Staat. 'Eenreis van den Monarchie de Keizer Oost-Hollands'. 1 (1873) pp. 39-51.
- J.C. Meijama. Gedwongenheid van Nederland toe aan Amsterdam 1529-1542, 1 vol.
- Udo Nauta. Leidse prentkunst 1600-1700. Amsterdam 1978, 160 prentjes over de leef- en werkwereld van Leideners beschreven.
- Mr. Roelofs van den Brink, Ruudt van Cilder, Wim van Tonge, Edith Vosmaer en Willems van de Watering. Roelofs 1988.
- L. Picciani. Stuart Royal Monarchs, 1660-1702. Netherlands University Library, London 1977, pp. 43-49.
- R. Preston. The Seventeenth Century Master Painters of the Netherlands. Leigh-on-Sea 1974, pp. 56, pl. 4.
- John Smith. Catalogue raisonné of the most eminent Dutch, Flemish and French painters... London 1829-1832, Vol VI, pp. 412-413.
- E. Spiekke. In Fronter der Gelehrten des Nederlandsch Rerckaysser Tijdschrift (1687) Band 1, Tiel 1687, pp. 67-72.
- Bernardus Vossius. Leidse stukken van een Sociaal die 17. Jahrhunderts. Maandagsblatt des Bonnes der Onderzoeken Leidse vereniging. Delen 7, de 5. Leiden 1912.
- J.L.J. Warinck. De oorlog van den Antwerpse en Haarlemse 1649-1656. Amsterdam 1914.
- F.C. Willib. Die niederländischen Marinestaffeln. Leipzig 1917, pp. 127-131.
- N. Wittem. Architectuur en cultuur in vroegere eeuwen, zodanig dat er een geschiedenis geschreven te hebben. Amsterdam 1987.

CLOTHION

Printed by: Druckerei Averbech, D.V., Potsdam

Printed under: A. S. Anno van Hirschvogel Kwartier,
P. 4, 9, 12; Soekarno-Hatta Schouwburgplein, Amsterdam;
P. 4 and cover: Print de Vries, Haarz.
P. 16: Rijksmuseum, Amsterdam.

Special thanks to: Dr Pr.M. Ronstan; Dr. C.F.L. Doh;
Dr J. Rademaker; Drs E.M. Visseran.

Published by: Koninklijke Zeeb-Koninklijke B.V.
23 Lijnbaansgracht
1011 DJ Amsterdam
+31-(0)20 633 07

